Supporting Information

How is the accelerated program different than the standard M.P.A. and M.A.I.R. degree(s)? Students are taking the exact same courses as any other graduate student. The only difference is the expedited timeline and ability to begin taking graduate courses early. You can view the curriculum in the Syracuse University Graduate Course Catalog.

How is the accelerated program structured?

Students admitted to the accelerated program can take a maximum of 12 graduate credits while still matriculated as an undergraduate student. It is critical, however, that at least half of the credits in any given semester are at the undergraduate level.

What if a student is graduating early and this structure doesn't work?

Students that are graduating significantly early and do not have at least 2 semesters available where 50% of their credits will be undergraduate coursework are not best suited for the accelerated program. We recommend that students in this situation apply with the general application process to the relevant graduate program.

Students that graduate in December can still apply for the accelerated program.

Can a student apply directly to any dual degrees?

Students cannot apply directly to any dual degrees as an accelerated student.

When students hear back an admission decision?

Admission notifications will be sent out by mid-April to the email address listed in the application materials.

If a student is admitted to the accelerated program, which graduate courses should they register for when still matriculated as an undergraduate student?

The Department recommends that students take a balanced mix of at least one core course and one elective. Ultimately, it's the student's discretion and a student may enroll in any open course with a PAI prefix.

How can a student earn scholarships and awards?

Students in the accelerated program are ineligible to receive graduate scholarships, grant aid or loans until they complete their Bachelor's degree. After students complete their undergraduate degree they will be eligible to receive graduate financial aid.

How much does the accelerated program cost?

At the graduate level, students pay cost per credit. Students can find current tuition rates posted on this webpage: <https://www.syracuse.edu/admissions/cost-and-aid/cost-of-attendance/graduate/>

- Simply, multiply the current cost per credit by the number of credits needed to earn the degree.
 - Remember, if you took graduate courses in undergrad, you can subtract the number of graduate credits earned while an undergraduate student from the total number of credits needed to earn the degree. This is where you get a significant cost savings!
 - For example, if you took the maximum number of graduate credits (12) while an undergraduate, this is how the calculation would be completed.
 - 40 total credits required – 12 graduate credits = 28 credits left to earn the degree. 28 graduate credits left *cost per credit = total tuition.

What if loans are needed to pay for graduate school?

Syracuse University's Office of Financial Aid offers loan counseling and support to all graduate students.

Who should a student contact with questions?

The first step should be to contact the assigned undergraduate advisor to receive counsel on the program and how an accelerated degree may impact undergraduate study.

For all other questions please contact the Maxwell School of Citizenship & Public Affairs Department of Public Administration & International Affairs at paia@syr.edu or by completing this brief information request form.
